1 To estimate the annual loss in funding to school districts beginning in the second year of operation of HB21, we multiplied the number of special education voucher students within each usage rate (1 percent, 2 percent or 3 percent) by TEA's statewide average 2014-15 M&O per student, which is $9022. Our analysis underestimates the funding loss to school districts from the second year onward because it does not include students covered by Section 504, who are also eligible for HB21 vouchers. A national study of U.S. Department of Education data showed that 132,074 students in Texas public schools, or 2.6% of the total student population, had 504 plans in the 2011-12 school year. See <http://www.advocacyinstitute.org/resources/Overall.504StudentsCRDC2012.pdf>. During the first year only that a student opts for a special education voucher, the student would still be counted for purposes of calculating weighted average daily attendance (WADA), and thus the district would not lose funding for that student. Also during the first year only for each student, the district would receive a "payback" equal to 5% of the statewide average M&O, or $451, per student.
